OSHA® REGULATION ON RESPIRABLE CRYSTALLINE SILICA DUST

According to the Occupational Safety and Health Administration, over two million construction workers a year are exposed to crystalline silica dust. Found in materials like concrete, tile, rock, stone and brick, exposure to silica dust can be a major cause of a fatal lung cancer known as silicosis.

Starting September 23, 2017, the OSHA® regulation on respirable crystalline silica dust (29 CFR 1926.1153) will be enforced for construction trades. This regulation reduces the Permissible Exposure Limit (PEL) to 50 µg/m³ over an 8-hour period and will affect jobsites nationwide.

COMPLIANCE METHODS

TABLE 1 (Compliance through OSHA's Specified Control Methods)

Rotary Drilling / Chipping

Drill or chip with a commercial dust collection system. Filtration must have a minimum 99% efficiency and a filter cleaning mechanism.

Cutting / Grinding

Use a shroud that is attached to a dust extractor with a suction rate of at least 25CFM per inch of wheel diameter. The dust extractor filter must have a minimum 99% efficiency and a filter cleaning mechanism.

OBJECTIVE DATA

Data provided by the manufacturer that proves users are below the PEL (Permissible Exposure Limit) when using engineered control methods such as MILWAUKEE® HAMMERVAC™ units or dust shrouds.
